

ABSTRACT

The infection of a mammalian host by a microorganism can be prevented or treated through the alteration of the expression of hypha-specific gene. These compounds may be used in the identification, prevention or treatment of microbial infection of mammalian hosts such as immunocompromised or immunosuppressed humans, for example, those having AIDS or undergoing transplantation or anti-cancer therapy.